

Water hookup agreement reached with North Reading

The water mains for four homes being constructed by the Wilmington Housing Authority in the "Lost Colony," may be installed soon. North Reading selectmen voted their approval of an agreement Monday night.

North Reading had been reluctant to provide water for the four homes, although it does provide water for other homes in the area. A letter from North Reading Town Administrator Jeff Zager to the housing authority had set forth ten conditions for connection to the water main.

Wilmington officials met with their North Reading counterparts on Friday morning and reached agreement, with Wilmington accepting eight conditions. Wilmington will grant North Reading an easement for water mains. Three three-way valves requested by North Reading will be installed, to be paid for by the state.

Meanwhile, four homes have been delivered and set on foundations in the King Street area. The four homes for the Lost Colony are now scheduled for delivery in the second week of August.

The "Lost Colony" is a part of the former real estate development in the early 1920s, in North Reading and Wilmington. A Quincy resident named Fletcher bought up a farm and subdivided the land, but not according to planning board standards. The result was that there were house lots in Wilmington which could be reached only by going through North Reading. The publisher of this paper, many years ago named the homes in that area the "Lost Colony" because it was so separated from other parts of Wilmington.

The word "fletcher" comes from Robin Hood days of England. A man was a fletcher if he was the person who put feathers on arrows, to increase the accuracy of the archers. Fletcher named his real estate development "Arrow Acres."

People who built their own homes in Arrow Acres installed their own water mains, from the North Reading system, and without proper engineering advice. Rocks, which engineers would insist being removed, were left in place, and too often the water mains were not at a depth which would ensure against freezing.

The Wilmington Water and Sewer Commissioners, over the years, have refused to accept responsibility for those water mains, this being a part of the problems for the two towns.

North Reading, too, has a problem, in that a dam on Martins Brook in Wilmington causes occasional floods over Burroughs Road in North Reading, which provides the only connection for the Lost Colony and several homes in the Martins Pond area of North Reading. North Reading has proposed that Wilmington lower the water level of Martins Brook, by digging a deeper channel where the brook flows under Salem Street.

This point had been addressed to the housing authority, although the dam is maintained by the Wilmington Water Dept.

Digging a deeper channel at that place would not change the levels of the water, Wilmington engineers have advised.

Derailment

A passenger train derailed in Wilmington center on Monday morning with only minor consequences. There were no injuries, and only minor damage to the tracks.

The derailment took place at 7:55 a.m. on the northbound track. One "truck" of a car left the tracks.

Some delays resulted, and repairs were completed before the evening rush hour.

The cause of the accident is still under investigation.

Diving accident claims life of James Flaherty

The line outside Cavanaugh's Funeral Home on Tuesday night was a long one. Jimmy Flaherty had many friends, most of them young.

Flaherty, 24 years of age, died on Saturday night in a diving accident in New Hampshire. He and his brothers-in-law had stopped for an evening swim in the Pemigewasset River in Campton. Flaherty dove a couple of times off a bridge, about 15 feet above the water. After his third dive, he failed to surface.

Police and firefighters were summoned, but it was 40 minutes before Flaherty's body was found.

A resident of Methuen, he had lived most of his life on Mystic Avenue in Wilmington. He was married to the former Lisa Guzzo, and was the father of two boys, Nolan and James J., Jr.

Car wash owner seeks sewer connection

Do the neighbors of the Quality Car Wash, on Main Street in Wilmington want to join in a common effort to have a sewer constructed to give them all-sewer service?

Bernie Grobziński, owner of the car wash, wants to know. He will be talking with his neighbors up and down Main Street, to see if they want that service.

The Wilmington Sewer and Water Department has plans for eventual sewers in many parts of Wilmington, but those plans do not include a small area along Main Street, an area that is easterly of the railroad tracks. To get sewer service those neighbors will have to join in a common venture to get service, or else wait for many years.

The sewer, if it is constructed, will have to go under the railroad tracks, and that can be expensive. But, a dozen or so prospective sewer users would be able to share the costs, and that is what Bernie will be talking about, in the near future with his neighbors.

So he told the water and sewer commissioners on July 16.

Langone has revised plan for ice rink completion

by Arlene Surprenant

Members of the Wilmington Conservation Commission took up several concerns in quick order at their meeting last Wednesday.

Members went along with engineer Erich Nitzsche who made two proposals to meet commission requirements on a lot off Boutwell Street. Owner Robert Gillis plans to construct two dwellings on the lot which would involve work in a buffer zone. Gillis had started the work and finished building one foundation. Nitzsche said this may have caused the large amount of flooding on one side of the property. Commission members had told Gillis he needed an Order of Conditions to proceed.

Nitzsche said he proposes to grade the property and build a retention pond to mitigate runoff and insure their is no downstream effect.

Members, for the most part, recognized Gillis had "acted in good faith" and they agreed to accept Nitzsche's plans.

In another case, commission members agreed to walk the property of Ada and Mark Peters on Middlesex Avenue to determine if it was isolated land subject to flooding and to answer other questions they had about the site.

Both the Conservation Commission and the Wilmington Board of Health had received complaints from neighbors on plans to alter the lot. The Peters are planning to build a new colonial home on their property.

Because of poor drainage, the site was heavily flooded in April. Ada Peters said they plan to increase the elevation in the front to allow runoff into the street and the drains there.

Some members expressed concern for abutters who they said could be negatively impacted by the construction. They said they would like to talk to an engineer before the Peters start building. Tom Roussel made a motion to have the commission pay for an engineer to do calculations because the whole issue affects many homeowners in the vicinity.

On another issue, Nitzsche said he wanted just five minutes to ask for an amended Order of Conditions for the Hamilton Woods subdivision off Rte. 62. He took at least 20 minutes only to be told it wasn't really legal to amend that document.

Nitzsche told members the planning board had agreed to reduce the width of one wetland crossing. Because of this, he would only need to fill less than 5,000 feet of wetland instead of the 6,000 feet planned.

Members felt an amended order would be illegal. But they said if developer Paul Butt would withdraw his appeal to DEQE on

Wilfred Lemos turns 90

Wilfred Lemos was 90 on July 10. He lives at 8 Parker St., in Wilmington where he has lived for the past 32 years.

A person of charming habits, he was a piano tuner as a young man. Piano tuning, however, was not a way to make money during the great depression of the 1930s. Wilfred was able to get a job as a custodian in a Wakefield school. He held on to that job for years, until he retired.

There was a barrel in the lunchroom, into which the students were supposed to put their table scraps and left over food. Some boys never tried. They simply threw their sandwiches in the general direction of the barrel, and, more often than not they missed.

Because Wilfred was trying to keep that lunch room clean he spoke to those students who were using that food barrel as a target. It was all good natured, but someone called him "Gestapo" and the name stuck.

Many pupils thought that was his family name. They were not aware of Hitlerite Germany, and the police groups that Hitler used to insure his rule over Germany.

To Wilfred it was only a joke, but the name did stick. He recalls it today as a funny story.

Working in that school was a good thing, he recalls. He had to keep going up and down stairs, and the exercise did him good.

Wilfred has some advice to people who want to see their 90th birthday in good health. Get a job where you have to go up and down stairs a lot. The exercise will do you good, he says.

Special Needs camping

On June 29, Camp 40 Acres began in full swing. On Thursday, July 2, participants took their first field trip to the Wamesit Bowling Alleys in Tewksbury.

July 8 was the second annual Parents Day. The staff and campers would like to thank all the parents who were able to attend. The second week of camp ended with our first overnight of the season.

The afternoon was spent swimming and playing games at the McCowen's pool. Upon returning to camp the campers enjoyed a cookout, compliments of the Sons of Italy and prepared by the Miller family. Following dinner, miniature golf, donated by the Special Needs Advisory Council, and toasted marshmallows ended the evening.

Camp's third week included the usual Tuesday trip to McCowen's to swim and a trip to the Wamesit Miniature Golf course in Tewksbury on Friday.

Trips in the near future include the North Shore Music Center, Hampton Beach and Beach Day at Silver Lake.

The staff at 40 Acres would like to thank everyone who has donated their time and effort and is looking forward to a great summer.

letters to the editor

Dear Larz:

Regarding Condos Chisholm, Tighe and Backers. I am writing this letter to you and your readers because I know that you realize the serious results of over-building in Wilmington.

The access roads (Dorchester Street and Reed Street) are completely unnecessary to develop this land.

The Chisholm Farm will soon be history when he surrounds himself with abutments who will promptly start a petition concerning the terrible smell from the mink ranch.

The conditions concerning access to this proposed complex are unreasonable, especially since he (Mr. Chisholm) has the land to gain access, without endangering the children and animals of his neighbors. It seems like he wants "his cake and eat it too." When all is said and done under the present plan, we the residents of this area will have to live in the aftermath of some greedy people who will have made a bundle and left the area.

I, myself, am going to try once more to back our elected and appointed officials of the proud Town of Wilmington who, I am sure, will take the necessary steps to change this disrupting and costly plan. I hope they realize by the massive campaign against this unreasonable plan of Chisholm, Tighe and Backers, that we will not stop trying to urge our officials to guarantee that this plan is fair.

I am making an appeal to especially all my neighbors on Dorchester and Reed Avenue area to write to our officials and let your concerns be known.

Sincerely,
David J. Sweeney

Dear Larz:

We would like to offer our thoughts in defense of the Wilmington Fire Department ambulance service.

In the last 15 or more years, we have had many life-threatening calls to 658-3346 (for our daughter) and had response immediately.

Once a neighbor firefighter came across the street and gave her CPR until the ambulance came.

We do not wish to have the whole department made to look bad for one incident!

Sincerely,
Mary and Frank Mulholland
Shawsheen Avenue

Dear Larz:

Having recently returned from three weeks in Europe (Germany, France, Austria and Switzerland), I feel compelled to write a sad commentary. I'm sorry to say I've seen more litter in Wilmington than I did in all of Europe.

Everyone over there seems to take great pride in their homes, even the poorest homes are clean and neat with flowers everywhere. I noticed also that graffiti is virtually nonexistent (there were a couple of references to our President).

We, here, also have a beautiful country, and what I don't understand is why we're so hell-bent on spoiling it...Wake up Wilmington, we too could have, if not beautiful, at least a very pretty town.

Your's for a clean Wilmington
Annette Leathers

Dear Larz:

I am writing this letter to thank the Wilmington Recreation Department and especially Mr. C and Linda for the Tiny Tots Program. My children have attended Tiny Tots for seven years and each year the program gets better.

It is a three week program and each day has a special theme. They also go on a field trip each week. The field trips are exciting for the youngsters. Last year was the first time my son went for a train ride. This year they have gone on the swan boats and to Children's Museum. Next year will be our last year in the program as a Tiny Tot, but my oldest who was in the program will then start as a volunteer.

I have always felt that my children were in safe hands and enjoying themselves in the program.

Thanks again to all who make this program possible and look forward to it again next year.

Pobody's Nerfect....

On that we can all agree, however, it seems that Mr. Swodya (not to be confused with Yoda, please) delights in attacking the Town Hall Management at every opportunity. And the Town Crier supplies him that opportunity on a regular basis.

The last weeks "Frankly Speaking" in a vicious vein, seemed most out of place. Commentary is one thing mud slinging is another.

There are a lot of very positive things happening at the Town Hall and perhaps your paper should highlight some of those things and people.

Some of those positive people are the ladies who back up all the department heads: Carole L. Barden in the Water Department, Joanne M. Burke in the Assessors office, Elizabeth Coville, Asst. Treas and Tas Collector, Susan Delaney, Recreation, Joan Goulet, Board of Appeals/Bldg. Carolyn M. Asst. Acct. Insp, Marion Murphy Treas/Coll, Sandra Murphy in Planning (a true lady and a solid contributor to the efficient running of our town.) And howabout Margaret Wagstaff and her crew Arlene Rybicki, June Rypma, and Anne Whitney (talk about dedication).

Mrs. Johnson over at the Highway Department, certainly has paid her dues and Phyllis Vieira in the Assessors Office, Kathleen Scanlon, Asst. Town Clerk. All of these ladies aren't exactly chicken soup.

Ella Bellmore certainly contributed to Conservation for a number of years, she was dedicated, courteous and efficient. The job was a good part time one for a dedicated Mother bringing up her children. It offered Ella the better part of two worlds and she and Bruce were a good combination. But the job description was part-time secretarial. Ella knew that.

There was no politics in Ella's leaving it was simply that scheduled hours were needed and Liz Sabounjian wanted to get information out on schedule.

The town hall is running more efficiently than it has in all the 20 years I have been here. I have talked to you Fred about this on several occasions.

Mr. Swodya is an aspiring politician and perhaps you should post his column as "political advertisement," considering his political views or better yet why not give the Town Hall equal space to let us know all the positive things that are happening.

A. Linehan

Dear Anne,

You may want to consult with Ella as to whether or not politics are a factor in her dismissal. She is convinced they were, as was noted in her quotes in the column to which you refer. Secondly, the column was critical only of the town manager, who deserved to be criticized in this case. As for the contributions of others at town hall, we recognize them, and they know that. You should be reminded of Arlene Surprenant's series on town officials which has been carried by the paper. For example, we would refer you to the June 24th edition, page 7, the May 27th edition, page 2, and the April 8th edition, page 2. Furthermore, if Buzz had been as quick to fire former Town Engineer Bob Higgins as he was Ella Bellmore, we'd all be applauding him right now. Finally, who is Yoda?

K.J.S.

Dear Larz:

I would like to take this opportunity to thank the following people who assisted at our annual Cleanup Day, helping to prepare camp for the Special Needs Day Camp at Camp 40 Acres from June 29 to August 14.

Bob Barry, Bob LeBoeuf, Bob Rauseo, Harvey Card and Spencer McNeil of the S.W.E.A.T. Team, also Jim Giblin of Pack No. 36 Lowell and John O'Leary of Pack No. 136 sponsored by the American Legion Post in Wilmington.

A reminder that Wilmington Jr. Camps (Camp 40 Acres) welcomes and encourages use of Camp Forty Acres by organized youth groups for all types of social, entertainment or patriotic endeavors as well as camping.

Anyone interested in using the Camp should contact me at 657-7398.

Very truly yours,
Charles N. Gilbert, President
Wilmington Jr. Camps, Inc.

Pit Bull

"Petey" the Pit Bull has never bitten anyone. Yet, when his picture appeared in the Town Crier last month, there were people calling for him to be destroyed. Dog officer Ellen Davis was able to find a home for the dog, out of town.

The Wilmington selectmen went so far as to pass a resolution that the dog officer should not put up for adoption any vicious breeds of dogs. The selectmen, however, failed to specify which breeds they consider vicious, or to set any criteria for making such a determination. (Photo by Joe Lenge)

Frankly speaking

by Kevin John Sowyrda

Pit Bull Terrier attacks have been one of the more provocative news stories lately, with a number of incidents occurring throughout the country, and in our own area. But according to Carter Luke, Director of Shelters for the Mass. Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, people are overreacting to problems with the breed, and that the problem of animal control goes well beyond that of the Pit Bull alone.

According to Mr. Luke, there is a history behind this aggressive breed of dog which can help to explain its nature. The origin of the breed began three or four hundred years ago with the sport of bull baiting, which was particularly popular in England. In this rather vulgar event a bull was literally tethered to the ground and attacked by dogs. When the sport was outlawed in the early 1800's, the dogs used in bull baiting were then used to fight each other in dog fights, with spectators making bets on the winner.

Dog fighting, which quickly came to America, incorporated many types of dogs. Cross breeding was done with Terriers, which were known to be fast and aggressive. And as dog fighting literally took place in a pit, this breed came to be known as Pit Terriers, as we call them today.

Presently, dog fighting is illegal in all 50 states, and is in fact a felony in Massachusetts. As such, according to Carter Luke of the M.S.P.C.A., the inclination to fight and to be aggressive has been bred out of Pit Terriers, for the most part.

So we put the question to Carter Luke concerning what communities should do in respect to regulations on Pit Bulls. According to Luke, the problem with Pit Bull attacks, as with any dog attack, is the owner. "Dogs' personalities are made up from training and rearing experiences. If you raise a dog to be aggressive, it can be aggressive", Luke said. He stresses that control is the key factor, and that he himself will not let his dogs run loose. "We need to require responsible behavior from people", Luke says.

In the town of Lynn, which has had the greatest problem with Pit Bull attacks, a 'breed-specific law' has been proposed. This would outlaw the private ownership of the Pit breed itself. Luke and the M.S.P.C.A. are opposed to this, as "Breed specific laws won't protect citizens from the whole wide range of vicious dogs, and most Pit Bull dogs are friendly companions; most aren't dangerous." Luke went on to explain that the courts will tend to throw out breed specific laws, as mixed breeding makes identifying a dog's exact lineage difficult at best.

According to Carter Luke, the reporting lately on Pit Bull Terriers has become sensationalized. He commented that people have been attacked by many dog breeds, but that only Pit Bull attacks have received the media attention. "Everytime someone is bitten by a Pit Bull, you're guaranteed mass media coverage, but not when another breed commits the same act." Luke also referred to a case in Lawrence last May where a man died of a heart attack after having been chased by two dogs, one of which was a Pit Bull. When it was reported on the news that the Pit in question would be given to the M.S.P.C.A., they received six calls from people wishing to take the dog in. Luke attributes this to a sort of fascination that some people now have with owning Pits, "as if it gives them some sort of power."

And as for some of the more serious injuries that have been reported from direct Pit Bull attacks, Luke feels that all dog owners should be held accountable. "We have one of the worst animal control policies in America here in Massachusetts, but strict penalties need to be required of people when necessary."

The Humble Farmer Equal opportunity questions

An accusing finger was pointed at the nation's criminal justice system when it was discovered that a preponderance of the inmates on death row were black.

"Racial discrimination," the newspaper columnist cried.

What those male chauvinist pigs - columnists and cartoonists alike - failed to recognize was that none of the inmates in question were women.

This bothered my neighbor, Gramp Wiley, for Gramp dreams of a day when we will all be exactly equal.

After outlining the problem to me he said, "We obviously either have to get some women in there through a volunteer quota system or let the men out."

"Some states might not go along with it," I argued.

Gramp pounded the arm of his rocker and shouted, "States that do not comply should have their electric power subsidies cut."

"The spirit of volunteering - even for such noble causes of principle - has flagged in recent years."

"In previous periods of crisis we have resorted to the draft."

I looked Gramp square in the eye and very slowly said, "But will even our most modern women friends want to submit to such traditional male values? It's simply a case of more male than female criminals."

"Women legislators will have to come up with laws that women are more likely to break."

I have to admire my old neighbor. Everything is so simple and logical when he explains it.

Gramp leaned back in his rocker and pressed his fingertips together. "There are other gross examples of an outdated social conscience extant in our criminal justice system.

When someone goes berserk it's always a gunMAN or a madMAN."

"Reform in those areas will be a giant step forward for personkind," I agreed.

"We've already taken care of those easy words, like 'flagman.' I was over by Moody's Diner last night where they are doing all the road construction, and a big red and black sign said, 'flagger.'"

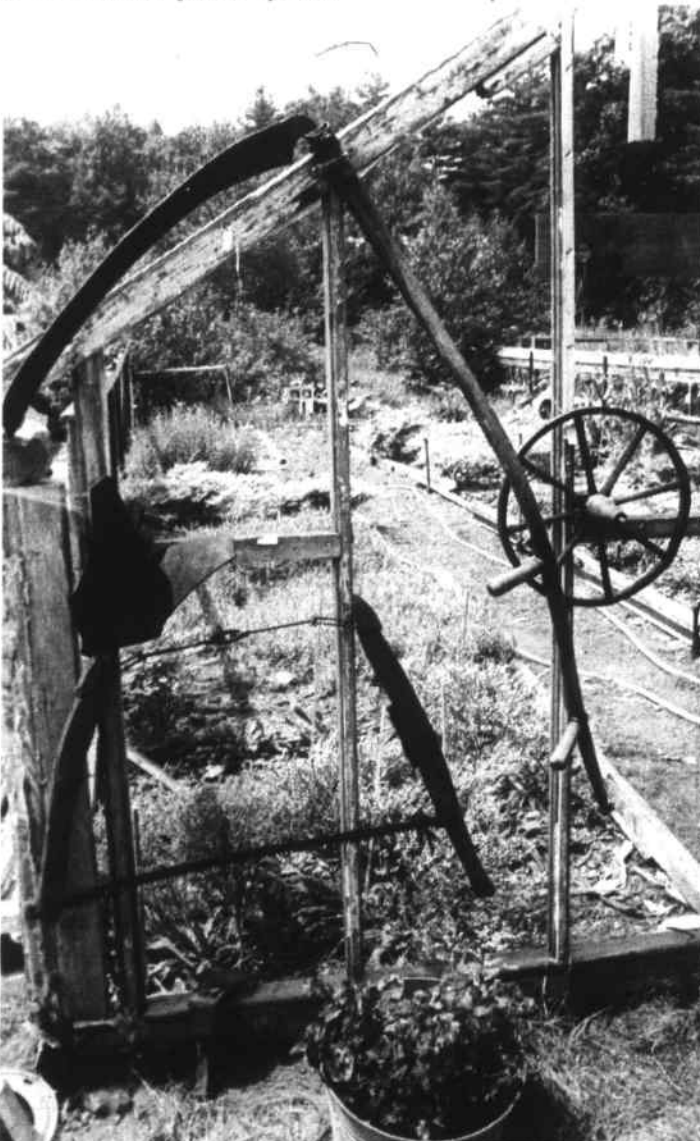

I nodded. "Everyone I know said it was a great relief off their minds when the 'flagman' sign was replaced by 'flagger.' But I'm afraid it will be a long time before we get true equality in our crowded jails."

Gramp leaned forward and said, "You don't know how crowded they are. I can see a day coming when it will be simpler and cheaper to put all the criminals out on the street and let the handful of other folks who are left protect themselves by moving into the jails and locking the doors."

"There'd be no men or women left on the street today if bad taste were a crime," I cried. "Whatever happened to those neckties that glowed in the dark? Every comic book advertised them - always showed two women with their hands in the air admiring the thing. The one I always wanted was guaranteed to keep the girls agog - even though I still haven't figured out what a state of agogment consists of - and said, 'Will You Kiss Me In The Dark, Baby?' I think they were painted with radium."

Gramp Wiley said, "I think the more important question is, whatever happened to the people who wore them?"

It was a green weekend on Livingston Street

by Frank Bonfilio

In the past I was the type of person who'd wear a "Kiss Me I'm Italian" shirt to school on St. Patrick's Day. But after this weekend, my attitude changed.

I decided to attend the Irish festival in Tewksbury, which was held this weekend at Hazel Field on Livingston Street.

I was a bit apprehensive about attending, but figured if I went in with a group of my Irish friends nobody would notice that I was Italian in heritage.

The entrance fee was a little steep, at five dollars a head, but this was going to be an experience I would soon not forget.

Upon entering the festival I noticed a large contingent of Tewksbury law enforcement types. At times there were as many as 18 police officers patrolling the area, to keep the crowds controlled, especially when the main beverage served was not milk.

As I walked through the main tent, heading for the dance floor, I realized one mistake -- I had no green on what so ever. So quickly I made a move to one of the tables and grabbed a free Irish style hat. Now I was set.

After a few beers I was ready to make a move to try the fine Irish cuisine which was being prepared on the far side of the tent. As I glanced over the table I smelled something unique for me -- boiled dinners.

After carefully thinking it over I decided to choose the corned beef sandwich. It looked good, so why not? I made my way back to the table where I had my first taste of Irish food. Not bad. As a matter of fact, pretty good! (Please forgive me, Grandma Bonfilio.)

After finishing the meal I next turned my attention to the dance floor, where I could hear the sounds of Richie O'Shea and The Frank Keegan Band.

I'd heard Irish music before but never up close and in person. In the beginning it sounded awful, but after a few songs I noticed it had a good beat to it.

Then it happened: My friend's mother asked me to dance.

Oh no! What do I do now? I tried the excuse, "I can't dance to Irish music." This will work -- she'll go ask someone else. But it failed. After being pushed up onto the dance floor, I had no choice but to go through with it.

I felt like a fish out of water. I had no idea what to do. Looking at the other people dancing I knew that this was going to be a tough one to learn.

Fortunately after a few songs I had shamrocks growing out of my heels and I was dancing like Donald O'Connor.

As the night continued I enjoyed myself more and more. My thanks go out to the Tewksbury police for keeping the festival safe for all.

There is one thing I learned: everyone can have a little Irish in them, no matter where their grandparents came from. Even Italy.

I'll be back next year.

Runner up

Stacey Palmer of Palmer Way, Wilmington was the first runner-up in the Miss Hampton Beach beauty contest held recently in New Hampshire. She is the daughter of Sgt. and Mrs. Jay Palmer.

Legislative district remains unchanged

A newly approved plan to redraw the boundaries of the Commonwealth's 160 House districts has preserved, without change, the Wilmington - Tewksbury District, Rep. James Miceli (D-Wilmington-Tewksbury) said recently.

"There were major changes and some necessary disruption in some districts in some parts of the state," according to Miceli, a member of the Joint Special Committee on Redistricting.

"But the feeling on the committee was that the 20th Middlesex District met all legal tests and measurements and should not be disrupted," he said.

Miceli said he "personally preferred" to have Precinct 3 in Wilmington added to his present district.

"I was hoping that the two towns could be written into the same district in their entirety," he said.

"The numbers just simply could not be worked out," he continued. "Our whole process was limited by the reality of hard numbers, and the numbers just simply would have far exceeded legal norms."

The 20th Middlesex District as it now stands and as re-approved by the House and Senate includes the entire town of Tewksbury and Precincts 1, 2, 4, 5, and 6 of Wilmington.

"That district totals 38,949 population," Miceli said. "And it is the 10th largest House district among the 160 in the state. Adding precinct 3 would have pushed the total population of the district up to 42,146 and that would have failed both the test of fairness and the test of law."

Miceli stated that while the two communities wouldn't be joined in their entirety, he was pleased, nevertheless, at both the 20th District plan and the statewide plan.

"It was an honor to be selected to the Redistricting Committee by Speaker Keverian," said Miceli. "It was a vote of trust and confidence in me by the Speaker. And it carried one overriding mandate. To redistrict fairly." In conjunction with this mandate, public hearings were held statewide. Initial redistricting drafts were refined into a near-final version which Miceli and other committee members presented at a series of state-wide public hearings.

The final version, presented to the House this past week, was approved by a 151 to one rollcall vote.

"I think that kind of bi-partisan support indicates the fairness written into redistricting by the Committee," Miceli said.

"We tried to treat every district and every community fairly and evenly in accordance with legal standards and precedents."

"Some areas--such as Greater Boston--did lose some seats. Some areas--such as southeastern Massachusetts--gained seats. And a number of districts had to be changed, some in a major way," Miceli said. "The population numbers required it and some of those changes did cause community and district disruptions."

"But," Miceli pointed out, "We were able to keep our two home towns free from change and disruption. And even though we could not unite both towns entirely, the geographic and numerical integrity of the 20th Middlesex District was protected."

Arrests

Tuesday evening Officer Joe Waterhouse arrested a Lowell man on motor vehicle charges. Victor Sanchez, 23 of 90a Roper Street was charged with operating a motor vehicle after suspension of his drivers license. He was bailed for a Wednesday court appearance.

About 1:30 a. m. Wednesday Officer Bob Richter arrested Richard W. Arthur, 30 of 17 Grossman St., Quincy. Arthur was charged with operating a motor vehicle while under the influence of alcohol, failing to keep right, operating after revocation of his drivers license, reckless driving and violation of the open liquor container law. He was held overnight to appear in court Wednesday morning.

Also arrested Wednesday morning by officers Jim Hanlon, Richter and Chalifour was John R. Clark, 17 of 39 Federal St., Quincy. Clark was charged with attempted larceny of a motor vehicle. The arrest ended an hour search and chase through the woods off Woburn Street after a car was discovered on Woburn Street near Great Neck. The vehicle proved to be stolen from North Andover.

Further investigation proved that a second car discovered in the area was stolen from North Street. Still another car in the area was damaged by an attempt to enter it.

Officer Fiore arrested a Dorchester man around 3:30 a.m. Friday. Alfredo Gonzales, 22 of 1275 Mass. Avenue, also known as Juan Quesada was charged with operating a motor vehicle after suspension of his drivers license. He was held overnight to appear in court.

Early Sunday morning Officer Paul Chalifour arrested a Melrose man on drunk driving charges. Douglas Charlton, 33 Richardson Road was charged with operating a motor vehicle while under the influence of alcohol. He was scheduled to appear in court Monday where his license would be suspended for 90 days, as he took and failed a breathalyzer test.

Officer Jim White arrested Paul

Cantwell, 19 of Temple Street, Tewksbury at 12:20 a.m. Monday on the basis of a default warrant issued by Woburn Court. Cantwell was held overnight for an appearance in Woburn Court Monday.

A Lowell man was arrested Monday at DeMoulas Market by Officer Bob Richter after the suspect was caught shoplifting cigarettes. The suspect tried to escape from the store manager by jumping out the second floor office at the store.

Roger T. Howard, 25, of 47 Shirley Avenue, Lowell suffered a broken ankle in the leap and was transported to Choate Hospital for treatment. Later he was taken to Woburn Court and arraigned before Judge Cullen. He was held on bail due to doubts about his identity.

Paul G. Senay, 13 Archer St., Lawrence was arrested by Officer Chris Neville after a traffic stop on Route 93. Senay was held on a state police warrant issued by the Leominster troopers and later bailed for a Wednesday court appearance.

Early Tuesday morning at 7 a.m. Officers Hanlon and Richter assisted Trooper Hanafin of the state police fugitive squad in arresting Kenneth Simmons, 20 of 14 Marjorie Road. He was taken directly to the Andover barracks.

the present lengthy order and file a revised plan, they would entertain that. Nitzsche said he had no problem with withdrawing the appeal if they could start from scratch with a new Order of Conditions.

Developer Joe Langone made a brief appearance before the board to show members a revised plan for the Ristuccia Exposition Center. The plan was revised to meet planning board and commission specifications on such things as drainage, buffer zone, lighting, and adequate parking.

In the new plan, engineers had increased the retention pond by 20,000 feet which, it was felt, would improve runoff from the site. Commission members still had a concern that the pond might not be large enough to handle a 100 year storm. They did agree to accept the revised plan providing they are given additional calculations covering that.

Basalt ('trap') and the Triassic Period

by Capt. Larz Neilson

From time to time stories have appeared in this paper of the volcanoes that were prevalent in this area during the Triassic Period (from 150 to 200 million years ago).

Cook's Hill in South Wilmington, through which Route 38 cuts, near the real estate office of Marion Murphy, is one of the best examples of an old volcano in Wilmington.

There were others, for a type of rock known as basalt is to be found in other places, and basalt is produced in volcanoes. Basalt may be seen on Wood Hill, near the Burlington-Wilmington line, and also in the cuts made for Route 38, where the Woburn Street-Park Street bridge crosses Route 93 are several types of basalt.

Basalt was known to the coal miners of England as 'trap' for it was found by them to be a block or dike, in their coal mines, where hot lava had poured into cracks caused by earth quakes. When the miners arrived at a seam of 'trap' they knew that there was no more coal to be found, at that particular level, without hard work.

'Trap' is one of the best stones that can be used in the construction of macadam highways. Hard and durable, it was used in most of the modern highways built in eastern Massachusetts in the past fifty years.

The cliff that seems to overhang the Woburn-Wilmington line, in Cook's Hill, is a trap. On top of it, fifty or sixty years ago, was building, of stone, built by a Greek-American who intended it to become an Orthodox Church.

Going south from that point there are many traces of volcanoes. Many of the hills in North Woburn are of volcanic origin, and the center of Woburn was located at the base of three volcanoes — hence the winding roads there.

Still further south, near the Winchester line, is a huge hill known as Blueberry Hill, and also as Blueberry Mountain. The name Blueberry Hill goes back to before the days of the Spanish American War, and perhaps even further, and was, at first entirely unofficial. Today the hill is known only by that name, and there is a road nearby which is known as Blueberry Hill Road.

It is a big one, solid rock, and mostly trap.

In 1905, a quarry was started there by General Goethals, he who built the Panama Canal. The quarry was a part of the General Crush Stone Company, a Pennsylvania organization. Today it is owned by the Winchester Crushed Rock Company (although it is almost all in Woburn).

General Goethals, an eminent engineer, realized that a lot of crushed stone was going to be needed, for the coming highways in America, and that was what led to the establishment of the quarry — over 12,000,000 cubic yards of trap were within Blueberry Hill (or Mountain).

Another quarry, established at about the same time, for the same reason, is in Saugus, near the ocean. It has reddish colored basalt, and the rock from this quarry can be recognized in many of the macadam highways in eastern Massachusetts.

The basalts in the Blueberry Hill quarry are mostly black, but there are some veins of other colors to be seen, including some red trap.

In the 1920's, for nearly 20 years, the Boston & Maine and other railroads in New England began to 'ballast' their rights of way, to increase safety and speed. The operation consisted of putting crushed rock beneath and around the railroad ties. A tremendous amount of crushed rock was used, and the Winchester Crushed Rock pit was a busy place.

It was a fascinating place for the kids of that age, and the company had its hands full, keeping them out of the quarry.

Above, on top of the Hill, half a dozen huge drills would work all day long, drilling six inch holes down into the hill. Down below a steam shovel would load rock into the dump cars of a little steam railroad, which hauled the rock to the crusher about quarter of a mile away, and dumped the rock with a mighty roar.

The rock, crushed, would fall onto a rubber belt conveyor which took it high up into a bin where it would be screened and separated according to size.

Railroad cars, or trucks would back into the bin, and in a matter of seconds would be filled with graded crushed rock, to the accompaniment of an ear splitting rumble. Hundreds of tons were shipped out daily.

The company installed a huge air compressor, with an electric motor that must have had 250 horsepower, to operate the drills by air power. Air hoses led up onto the mountain, like tentacles from an octopus.

Then every afternoon, about 4:30 p.m., the quarry would be cleared of workmen. No one would be allowed within a quarter of a mile of the 'face' of the operations, for on top of the mountain, at the drill holes, men were lowering dynamite into holes which had been drilled.

At about 5:15 p.m. the dynamite would be exploded — half a dozen 'Warumphs' would fill the air, and there would be half a dozen small clouds of smoke, as new rock tumbled to the bottom of the face.

It was a very satisfactory operation from the standpoint of the small-boy spectator, and over on the Boston & Maine railroad, half a mile away, homeward bound office workers from Boston could, if they took their noses out of their evening papers, see the blasts as they occurred, and then, two or three seconds later, hear the noise.

As the quarry became bigger and bigger it became a fertile hunting ground for 'rock hounds,' amateur and professional geologists. Various types of beryl have been found there occasionally, and there are many types of pegmatite and other rocks. Geology classes from both Harvard and Radcliff used to make regular visits to the quarry.

Operations stopped about 1958, when the demand for trap had lessened to the extent that it was no longer economically worthwhile to operate. Later someone set fire to the building that houses the compressor.

But the quarry is still there, 1200 to 1400 feet long, and dug over 400 feet into the mountain, with a face that is over 100 feet high in places. About 2,000,000 cubic yards of stone have been taken out, and perhaps there are 10,000,000 yards left, if operations are ever again worthwhile.

It is still a fascinating place. On top of one of the cliffs is a building that seems ready to make a great leap forward into nothing. It houses an electronic laboratory which is testing wave action, and nearby is the laboratory of the U.S. Public Health Service, which tests foodstuffs for 'radiation fallout'.

The quarry is the site for tests by the Monsanto Chemical Company of a new explosive which they are developing. About twice a month they explode a three pound charge, under carefully controlled conditions.

There is more to do about those little explosions than there ever was of the tons of dynamite which were exploded there. People imagine things — call up Winchester Town Hall of the Fire Department, and even a sonic boom, caused by an airplane is often reported as being evidence of another explosion in the old quarry.

But the old quarry sits there, perhaps larger than General Goethals had envisioned it, awaiting while steel turns to rust, either the resumption of operations, or Judgment Day.

Hill was chief of police, but he had a problem

Copyright © 1987 by Capt. Larz Neilson

Walter A. Hill was just about the kindest man who ever lived in Wilmington, but he had a problem.

His problem was based on the fact that he was the chief of police in a day when the Volstead Act was the law of the land. Walter liked to take an occasional drink. Sometimes he took it at the wrong time.

He was also a person who did not like to see acts of violence. With that kind of attitude it is sometimes difficult, one can say, to be a chief of police.

Born in Stoneham, he moved into Wilmington about 1906. His home was the finest one along Main Street, located at the corner of Main Street and Middlesex Avenue. It still exists, but is on the opposite side of Middlesex Avenue. Today it is an office building, and beside that office building is an apartment building which was at one time the barn, behind the home of Chief Hill.

Did Chief Hill buy that home, about 1906? Did he inherit it? Was he a relative of Cyrus Carter, who was a prominent manufacturer in Civil War days? Or was he a relative of the third wife of Cyrus Carter, a lady who was (and still is) known as Sarah Davis Jaquith Carter?

She was also, incidentally, the granddaughter of the man who was the corporal, in the company of Captain John Harnden, at the time of Bunker Hill.

The Sarah D J Carter lectures of Wilmington were established by the will of that lady, and they continue to this day.

Henry Carter of what is now High Street, in Wilmington, was a prosperous farmer who did well in the growing of hops, about the time of the War of 1812. His home still stands.

One of his sons, William H., built the big home which today is 14 High Street. He was the treasurer of the Boston & Maine Railroad many years ago. The other son, Cyrus, built the home on Main Street.

Both were, incidentally, descendants of the Rev. Thomas Carter, first minister of Woburn, back in 1643. And both were, as is evidenced by their homes, fairly prosperous individuals.

The house that Chief Hill bought or inherited had a long front walk, going up from Main Street. There were lilac bushes on each side, near the steps. It was quite a home.

When Wilmington's Chief of Police, Bill (William) Swain resigned in 1912 to become the chief of police in Reading, Walter A. Hill was named to the post by the board of selectmen. The few persons in Wilmington today who remember Walter A. Hill agree that he was a very nice person.

Wilmington was a nice quiet town, with a good railroad connection to Boston. During morning and evening hours there was a train to or from Boston about every 20 minutes. There was a special (sort of) train at the Silver Lake station in the morning known as the 8:11, or the Nashua Express. That train arrived in Boston, 17 miles away, in 19 minutes. That is better time than one can do that distance today.

Whether or not the town should buy a motorized fire engine was the big discussion of the day. The vote was no and instead the town spent $1500 to put in a number of wells, Chief Hill's home This office building at 8 Middlesex Ave. was once the home of Chief Walter Hill. It was originally located on the lot now occupied by the Massbank office.

all over town, for fire fighting purposes.

The police department cost the town only $600 a year, of which over one-third was paid to the chief.

Herbert (Herb) Barrows was the chairman of the board of selectmen. A little, wiry man, who had been a teacher in Reading High School, Herb was a farmer and a man who could be tough when needed. His farm is today Avco.

Prohibition was becoming a factor in the life of the land. Nothing really happened until World War I, when a prohibition measure was voted by congress, as a war measure. Then, about 1921, the Volstead Act was voted, and prohibition became a fact of life.

Chief Walter A. Hill found himself in an unpleasant situation. He had become an alcoholic.

It wasn't easy, in the beginning, to buy a drink in Wilmington. So, once a month or so, Walter Hill would go to Lowell on the streetcar, on a Saturday afternoon.

He would be in Wilmington Square standing around in uniform. He just couldn't help himself, when the Lowell car stopped. Walter Hill would find himself swinging aboard, and 15 or 20 minutes later he would be enjoying a cool one, in a bar in Lowell.

That evening, say about nine o'clock, Herb Barrows would get a telephone call from a friendly Lowell cop. "Come up and get your chief" would be the message.

Herb would harness a horse to an express wagon and go to Lowell. Walter Hill would be stretched out, on the sidewalk, in full uniform, in the full bliss of an alcoholic sleeping it off.

Men standing around would help get the chief into the back of the express wagon, and Herb would take the chief home and help put him to bed.

No one in Wilmington talked about it. Walter was just too nice a man.

But the story would be repeated, about four weeks later.

Another story to tell of those days is of the Jackson Club. It was located at the corner of Grove Avenue and Wild Avenue, the road that led down to the Silver Lake railroad station.

Young men from Charlestown were in that club. They were always on the lookout for some fun.

One story is about the Jackson Club and the street lights.

The boys owned a Ford touring car, model T, of course. At night they would drive around, with a single shot .22 rifle, shooting out street lights. If they missed, they would back up and take another shot.

Chief Hill had nothing to do with the street light episodes. Maybe he knew nothing about it.

Walter Hill knew about the evening that the riot occurred, because he was there.

The boys in the club had been beered up, and were in a good mood, in a manner of speaking, when the fighting started. Somebody called Walter Hill, and somebody called Herb Barrows.

Herb arrived to find the chief distressingly ringing his hands. He did not relish getting into the riot, on a personal basis.

When Herb arrived, he took one look, and then took personal action. He went in and he grabbed the first young man he came to by the collar. Then he dragged that young man out of the house, and down to Silver Lake. There the young man was thrown in the water.

"Oh, but he will drown!" the chief wailed.

"Let the bastard drown!" said Herb, and he went back to collar another young man.

But there were no young men left, in the Jackson Club.

New NET technology links Tewksbury and Wilmington

New England Telephone (NET) recently launched a major construction project between Tewksbury and Wilmington, implementing some of its most modern and sophisticated fiber optic and digital technology.

The project is expected to be completed by the end of 1987.

Company technicians are installing more than six miles of new fiber optic cable between the two communities.

"Fiber optic technology transforms voice, data and video signals into particles of laser light," said David Ravenesi, NET public relations manager. "This light is then beamed at more than 100,000 miles per second through the hair-thin glass fibers in each cable."

"The new cable will be able to transmit more than 34,000 simultaneous calls, which will be clearer and more reliable than those carried by traditional copper cables," he said.

This cable will enhance the offering of state-of-the-art telecommunications facilities between the Tewksbury and Wilmington central offices and will satisfy all forecasted calling requirements. This will help provide the most modern service for all business and residential lines between these two towns.

"We want to continually meet the telecommunications needs of our customers," Ravenesi said. "Fiber optic and digital technology will help enable us to achieve that goal."

NET will have installed more than 60,000 miles of fiber optics in Massachusetts by the end of this year.

These projects are part of NET's $495 million construction program this year to expand and improve the telecommunications network in the Bay State.

Woburn eliminates Wilmington, 10-4

Woburn National 10 Wilmington 4

The Wilmington Senior League girls dug deep and came up with a solid outing, but not good enough to overcome a superior Woburn National team.

Wilmington kept the game close through six innings with fine offensive effort from Punky Madden (two for four with two runs scored); Gina Martiniello (two for four); Jen O'Donnell (double and two RBI's); and Jaque Gray (one for three and one RBI).

Gray also notched the outstanding defensive play of the game in the first inning as the pivot on a six-four-three doubleplay.

Other defensive stars for Wilmington were Kris Gottlander at third base, Becky Powers at first and Sandy Palmisano with a fine running catch in rightfield.

Sharon Dellascio, after turning in a stellar performance at shortstop in Wilmington's opening game loss, pitched five strong innings, allowing six runs on six hits while stranding 10. Kelly Sullivan came in to relieve her in the sixth and after giving up two singles, got the next three batters.

Sullivan ran into trouble in the seventh when Woburn sent eight batters to the plate, scoring four times.

Playing for championship

Play for title

Wilmington girls one game away

Wilmington's District 13 11-12 year-old girls will play for the championship tonight (July 22) after coming from behind to nip Woburn American, 5-4 Tuesday night at Weafer Park.

The District 13 All-Star championship softball battle is set for 5:45 p.m. at Wilmington's Rotary Park against this same Woburn American team in what is a double elimination tournament.

The Wilmington girls rallied from a 4-3 deficit in the bottom of the sixth inning to win Tuesday night. Julie Robinson singled, Carrie Tarantino walked, Stacey Gillis singled and Nicole Quellet walked to force in the tying run.

Jenna Powers then lined a single to drive home the game winning run.

The Wilmington offensive leaders were Julie Robinson (one hit, three runs scored), Stacey Gillis (two hits, one RBI), Nicole Quellet (one hit, two RBI's), Jenna Powers (one hit, two RBI's), Kerri Lyman (two hits), Jennifer Murray (single) and Lee Iannacchino (single).

Kristine Robinson was the winning pitcher, striking out two in a route-going performance.

Woburn scored its four runs in the fourth inning on two infield hits, two walks and a Wilmington error.

The defensive stars for the winners were Adrienne Fay with a fantastic catch in the outfield, Stacey Gillis with some fine play at secondbase, Kerri Lyman with three putouts and an assist in the outfield and Jen Murray with some solid play at shortstop.

After a disappointing opening game loss to the Woburn Americans (5-2), the Wilmington Girls All-Stars have battled back with consecutive victories over the Woburn Nationals (4-3) and the Stoneham All-Stars (15-8).

Kristine Robinson allowed only six hits, struck out four and overcame early control trouble to close the door on the hard hitting Nationals in leading the Stars to the hard earned, come from behind victory as the Wilmington team came from a 3-1 deficit to score three runs in the bottom of the sixth, the winning run being scored by Karen Buckley and knocked in by Lee Iannacchino for the exciting victory.

Wilmington's offense was led by Julie Robinson and Carrie Tarantino with two hits each, while Stacey Gillis, Nicole Quellet and Jenn Murray contributed one each.

Key defensive plays were turned in by outfielders Adrienne Fay and Julie Robinson, while the entire Wilmington infield played superbly.

On Saturday, in the semifinals, Wilmington exploded for 15 runs and 17 hits as the Stars stunned opening round winner Stoneham, 15-8.

Astro pitching improved

Mon., July 13: In one of the better pitched games of the ICU season, the Somerville Red Sox tied the Astros, 2-2.

Larry Thomas (1-1) hurled his second good outing against the Sox (June 30 he topped the Sox, 3-1) allowing only three hits, while walking two and striking out seven.

Mike Adamson, filling in at third base for the injured Rich DeWild, drove in both Astro runs with a two out single in the fifth inning.

The Sox knotted the contest in the bottom of the seventh on a double and two flyball outs.

Thurs., July 16: The Melrose Rams pounded four Astro hurlers for 10 runs and 11 hits enroute to a 10-3 drubbing of the Astros.

Phil Stephens (1-4) Brenda O'Brien and Rich Bicknell were strong on the hill for manager Bob Dicey's nine.

Tim Budrewicz continued his road back with a shutout inning in the sixth.

Scott Underwood paced the Astros with a pair of hits and an RBI, while Larry Thomas drove in a run with a third inning double.

Fri., July 17: The Astros built an early 9-0 lead and withstood a late Medford surge to defeat the second place Mustangs, 10-3.

Serge Oliver blasted a two-run homer in the first inning, while Scott Bolton knocked in a pair of runs in a five run second inning.

Joe Puleo went four plus innings to earn the victory. Puleo struckout one, walked one, allowed eight runs on eight hits to improve his record to 4-3.

Larry Thomas hurled two shutout innings to save the Astros' upset victory.

Sun., July 19: Larry Thomas pitched another complete game

(three this season) as the Astros came from a 2-0 deficit to knot the league leading Wakefield Merchants, 2-2.

Thomas gave up two runs in the second inning, but hurled two-hit shutout ball the rest of the game.

Rich DeWild drove in both Astro runs with a clutch two-out single in the third frame.

Dave Woods had a double in three at bats in his second game since returning from a disabling arm injury to aid the Astro attack.

ABOUT CAPITAL GAINS AND TAXES

Aren't long term capital gains just like any other income, under the new tax law? No, especially this year.

Granted, the tax bite is going up. Previously, the maximum rate for long-term capital gains was 20 percent. In the future, the tax top rate, for all kinds of income, will be 28 percent, and a surtax will bring that to 33 percent for certain high-income tax groups. For 1987, a transition year, the top tax bracket is 38-1/2 percent, down from 50 percent -- but there is a special rate for long-term capital gain of 28 percent.

This can influence investment decisions. It may make sense for some people to take gains this year and save the extra 5 percent surtax on the gain. This may be the time to take long-term losses, too. Excess losses (after setting off capital gains) can be deducted dollar for dollar against income, up to a $3,000 ceiling -- at a 38-1/2 rate this year.

What are the tax consequences of your investment plans? Talk it over with the professionals at Joyce K. Brisbois, C.P.A. 8 Middlesex Ave., P.O. Box 176, Wilmington, MA 01887 658-5034.

Sox should move toward future

It really is time for the Red Sox, a team that burned me and about a million other fools for the last time in October, to make some serious moves toward their baseball future.

Move Bill Buckner. To Oakland or somewhere where I won't have to watch him limp and complain. Sure, the guy has guts, but he is pushing 40 and the nature of the game (even baseball) is to make room for some young blood eventually.

Don Baylor should stick around as a pinch hitter for the remainder of the season, after which he should retire gracefully to the coaching box. Baylor would make a great Red Sox manager, but you will never see it happen in your lifetime, at least not in Boston.

Pawtucket slugger Sam Horn (30 homers) is the new designated hitter. No, he can not play firstbase. He is terrible at what is not a tough position. Remember, that's where they put Mickey Mantle when he couldn't walk anymore.

Eventually Horn will have to learn to play that position, but not this year when a thrust into the fielding limelight could ruin all Sam has accomplished with the bat.

Dwight Evans is my firstbaseman in this team of the semi-future. All this will make way for what could be the best young outfield in baseball within two years: Mike Greenwell, Ellis Burks and Todd Benzinger. There also must be room for young centerfielder Brady Anderson in a year or two.

Jim Ed Rice is the designated hitter, but it is becoming painfully obvious that the man needs glasses or something. He can't hit a ball at night when it's pitched, and he can't catch it when it is hit to him on any occasion in leftfield.

Bring shortstop Jody Reed up from Pawtucket and play him. He is not a Latin, so Boston has no excuse to trade him in the near future.

Up comes John Marzano and he should split (yes, split) the catching duties for the remainder of the season with Rich Gedman. Gedman is a fair receiver at best and must work like the dickens on his hitting. No spring training for Gedman and you have a man with a bat and absolutely no idea after that.

Marty Barrett and Wade Boggs stay right where they are, since Barrett remains a tireless worker when he's healthy and Boggs is the sole reason for watching this team for the remainder of the season.

As for the pitching, I'm not convinced that Schraldi and Gardner can't be an adequate bullpen duo. The starting pitching should straighten itself out if Clemens and Boyd round into form. Hurst will never be a great pitcher, but he is a good one. Sellers can do the job as a fourth starter, and I'd give Rob Woodward another shot. I'd find another team for laughing boy Al Nipper and his knuckler.

A manager with some guts and imagination would help. Dick Williams is in Seattle, and he should be available after he begins to tick people off approximately two years from now when the Mariners win their first American League pennant.

Boggs set

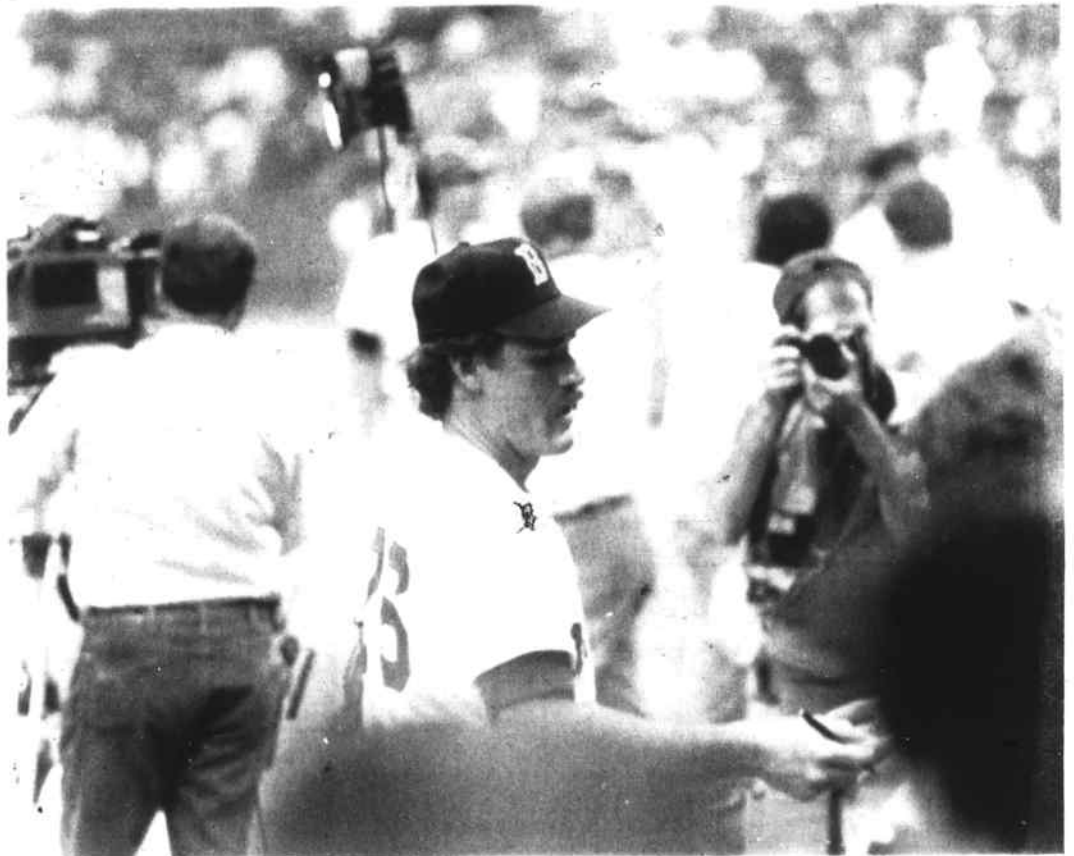

Wade Boggs gets set at thirdbase Monday night against the Angels. The Red Sox all-star stroked a pair of hits and made two fine defensive plays in the 3-2 defeat.

(Rick Cooke photos)

Ellis Burks

Centerfielder Ellis Burks is one of a trio of young Red Sox outfielders that should be playing everyday as the team goes nowhere in 1987.

Busy Boggs

Boston Red Sox thirdbaseman Wade Boggs kept busy signing autographs prior to Monday night's 3-2 loss to the California Angels. Boggs is now the only legitimate reason for fans to sit through games at Fenway Park.

Outdoors column

by Bill Conlon

While teaching my stepsons the wonders of fishing and hunting, I keep one ironclad law in effect at all times -- if you pack it in, you'd damn well better pack it back out again. There are no excuses for littering.

Nothing -- absolutely nothing -- is so rankling as to see litter while out fishing, or hiking through the deep woods. The sight of a pristine pine forest is ruined, for me at least, by seeing a discarded Bud can in the picture. And it doesn't stop there.

Litter comes in many forms -- all of it ugly, improper and dangerous. Yes, dangerous. My college paper once got to print a sad photo of a seagull, taken at the school's duck pond. The picture was sad because the gull was being strangled by a plastic six-pack holder wrapped around its neck.

(If it sounds like I'm on a soapbox for this one, good. Indeed I am. This is one issue where I'll allow no quarter. I've even been known to slam on the brakes to make a passenger to go back and pick up a gum wrapper tossed out the car window.)

Almost all of the litter found outdoors is avoidable. The only litter with an official sanction, however abhorrent, is the sewage output which appears on coastal beaches. Plastic tampon applicators on the beach mean there are open sewers nearby, pouring into the sea, and that is terribly wrong.

God will not forgive us for poisoning the planet.

U.S. Rep. Gary Studds, though I may not entirely agree with him as a person, has proposed legislation making it a crime to litter the sea. Sounds good.

For me, perhaps the strangest evidence of water pollution I found came last year, while fishing along the banks of the Merrimack River. The rocks below the bridge near Lowell were covered with -- and this is a cold fact -- tomato plants! There had to be thousands of tomato plants growing there, on both sides of the river.

The reason, simply, is that we don't digest the seeds when we eat tomatoes. The seeds went from table to toilet, and the sewers then poured into the river. The seeds simply washed ashore and did what they do best.

Thankfully, the Environmental Protection Agency came down hard on the city of Lowell for not having the sewers connected. The heavy fines imposed on the city ($10,000 a day) have hastened the process of getting Lowell tied into the sewage treatment plant on Duck Island. Bully!

But there is a lot that can be done on a more local scale. You don't have to be a city government to help stop the trashing of America.

First and foremost, everyone needs to break the old habit of throwing junk on the ground, everything from cigarette butts to refrigerators. It drives my wife bananas to pull fistfuls of cigarette butts out of my pockets when she does the laundry, but at least they aren't cluttering up my planet. My standard procedure is to twist the extra tobacco out of the butt, then slide the filter into a "garbage pocket."

I also do the same with fishing line. After cutting away a fist-sized knot, the loose bundle of line goes into my junk pocket, not on the ground. Monofilament fishing line doesn't rot away -- that stuff will still be choking fish and wildlife long after your grandchildren have taught their kids to fish.

An even better move is to carry along a kitchen-sized trash bag on outdoors trips. If you see some junk, pick it up! Anything that doesn't belong there, from empty shot-shells to beer cans, should go. My hunting partner and I take pride in always bringing more garbage out of the woods than we took in.

A sign posted at a state park I once visited summed it up nicely: "Take nothing but pictures, leave nothing but footprints."

Please, it's your planet, and if you don't help keep it clean, who will? Start now.

- Tackle Box -

Congratulations to Mike Carroll, recently elected as president of the Tewksbury Rod & Gun club. The rumor mill has it on fairly good authority that one of President Mike's first moves will be to reopen the Trout Pond committee.

Seems there was a move some years ago at TR&G to dredge out the stream behind the Chandler Street clubhouse to build a trout pond. Local examples being looked at include trout ponds at the Tyngsboro Sportsmen's Club and another at the Centerville Sportsmen's in Dracut.

Remember to get those antlerless deer permits in by August 15. The application is attached to the back of the hunting license, and a map of the hunting zones is included in the abstracts of the fish and game laws. For what it's worth I'm heading for Area 6, but if the deer I'm after is still there, an antlerless permit will be terribly unnecessary.

During last week's vacation I managed to get out on the briny for a bluefishing trip on one of Eastman's party boats, out of Seabrook, N.H., where we fished in the shadow of the Isle of Shoals. Unfortunately, only one blue was taken on the entire boat during the half-day trip. (So much for the $1 each pool for biggest fish.) A crew member said bluefishing is just warming up in this area, and things should be much improved over the coming weeks.

IN ORDER TO CREATE the beautiful fairy tale princess Snow White, Walt Disney and his animators enlisted the vocal talents of 18-year-old Adriana Caselotti (upper right) and studied the graceful movements of Marge Belcher (lower right). The latter changed her name years later to Marge Champion and gained renown as a dancer and choreographer. 1987 marks the 50th anniversary of Disney's masterpiece. To celebrate the occasion, Buena Vista will be re-releasing "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" nationwide and in 60 countries worldwide.

Snow White

A conversation with the woman who is the voice of Snow White

by Rochelle Flynn

Ours is a decade of disillusionment. A lot of our innocence went by the wayside when mom went to work, apple pies were found in the frozen food section and Old Glory brought out demonstrators instead of salutes. But to find out that the last bastion of unsullied fantasy may not be as unwavering as we thought it was is a blow humanity may not recover from, but here goes: Snow White did not lead a charmed life, but was a victim of a capitalistic society.

It may sound like dialogue from a Soviet propaganda film, but in this, the year of that delightful cartoon's 50th anniversary, the woman who provided Snow White's lilting voice says she has earned but $14,000 of the approximately $330 million that the feature-length animation has made over the years.

Adriana Caselotti, 71, the woman who spoke for Snow in 1937, is a lively woman who, in a recent telephone conversation, sounded pretty much the same way she did when she dubbed the character's voice. Retired from a successful real estate business, Caselotti now lives in Los Angeles and likes to answer her phone by singing ditties from the movie. She will break into "I'm Wishing (for the one I love to find me)" at the sight of an unhappy store clerk, and invariably cheers them up. Despite this somewhat eccentric, albeit happy habit, Caselotti comes across as a woman grounded firmly in reality.

There has been a lot of hoopla over the re-release of the cartoon on June 17, and rightfully so, because "Snow White" dragged the Disney Studios out of depression-era obscurity to the thriving business it is today. There had never been anything like it before, and Walt Disney literally had to beg banks to finance the project when he ran out of money half-way through. But when it was completed, it was the most successful 83-minutes of film he would ever witness. The 250,000 drawings, a winsome musical score provided by 80 musicians and 1,500 different colors and hues made for a very successful opening night on December 21, 1937.

Ironically, Caselotti and Harry Stockwell, the man who provided the voice for Prince Charming, weren't even invited to the premiere and had to sneak into the theatre and stand in the back of the balcony. It wasn't until after the credits rolled that Caselotti realized that all of the animators and illustrators had been listed, but she hadn't. Something she says still has not been rectified.

A brief history Part II

Reading, The Third Parish

By JIM ROUILLARD

Reading was a baby once, fondly called Wood End.

Wakefield was its mother then, and bore its own child's later name.

But Wood End wanted to move out of the house.

Like an indulgent parent in any age, Wakefield (then Reading) offered Reading (then Wood End) a bribe - 17 pounds a year - to shut its mouth and cease its clamor.

Perhaps the parent got a bargain. In any case Wood End stayed at home, its mouth closed for 26 years.

And then the noise resumed.

Local histories usually provide a complicated mosaic - often seeming to be primarily tales of separation, annexation and division.

The modern town of Reading's tale is no exception.

Once called "the Cinderella of the Readings" - she has evolved from wood lot and West End to William Lloyd Garrison's "banner town" of the anti-slavery movement.

Woburn historian Edward Johnson - writing in 1951 - commented that "Reading hath her habitation in the centre of the country."

He meant, of course, that it was in the center of the then-settled portion of New England.

Edwin Conklin, writing considerably later (1927), described the town as it had come to be after almost three centuries - standing, still at a kind of gentle, pastoral apex built on 18th and 19th century growth and development.

"The section is one of the loveliest in the country, elevated, but softly rolling, with nearby crystal lakes, pleasant streams and broad acres. A parkway system including the best of scenic roads, connects it with Boston.

"The principle village, and Reading Highlands, are both placed on heights combining glorious views with a most salubrious climate. Industries, aside from farming, have always been relatively few, and factories of large size have never marred the landscape.

"Agriculture, the main occupation from early times, has taken the form of cattle, pastures and hayfields, giving the terrain the appearance of a large park, rather than a farm area. More and more the town has become a residential section, with many beautiful estates, and smaller homes scattered throughout the district."

Thus Conklin, in his "Middlesex County and Its People," presents a charming (and now somewhat nostalgic) view of the Reading of 60 years ago.

But what of its middle years?

The "Ancient Town of Reading" had been established as Lynn Village in 1639, incorporated as Reading in 1644. Yet references to its early years chiefly involved what is now the town of Wakefield. A two-mile

Video-classrooms go on TV

(Note: On July 15th, "Communities share video-classroom concept" focused on the extensive legwork taking place "off-camera" so that video systems in Reading, Wakefield, Lynnfield and North Reading schools can begin to interact. Recently - after a few adjustments and with a lot of fine-tuning, the first of these systems was actually turned on.)

By PHYLLIS NISSEN

"Tell Wakefield we're hearing trash and seeing color bars," said Reading High Media Specialist Joe Cain as the interactive video classrooms at both Reading and Wakefield High Schools were "turned on" recently - producing what may be the first interactive video classroom system in any secondary schools in New England. These state-of-the-art classrooms are the fruit of a $17,902 educational technology grant from the Massachusetts Board of Education, with similar rooms planned for North Reading and Lynnfield.

The Reading-Wakefield experiment began on a Monday with a tangle of cable wires, a distortion of microphones and an embarrassment of "stars." It ended on a Friday in an atmosphere of comfortable camaraderie and satisfaction among participants at both sites.

At the beginning, four or so students from Joann Cosentino's English classes at WHS and two from Ron Howland's "American Literature of the '20s and '30s" in Reading were exposed to terms more technical than literary. "Head-ends, I-loops, and converters" were the items of the hour as Cain and his counterpart, Wakefield physics teacher Dr.

Bob Bennett, dealt one-by-one with almost all the things that could go wrong in the system. By midweek, students and teachers had forgotten to worry about how they appeared on camera and by week's end, Howland was able to involve everyone in discussions of "modern" poetry and the "smell of snow" - and to do so with humor and style. "I couldn't believe the things I was saying to them," says Howland. "It took a few days but I finally reached the point where I lost the camera and I found the students."

Although it took only five days to get from that Monday's 45 minutes of technical garble to Friday's 45 of poetry, it took months of technical trial-and-error to reach that Monday.

Substantial cooperation between Reading's Continental and Wakefield's Warner Cable companies resulted in the successful link between the two systems which allows the electronic classroom to function. The cable signals go from the Reading classroom to the head-end at Bear Hill to Wakefield's head-end to WHS and back. One of the difficulties of this and regular cable is that there's no way of telling where, what or if anything has gone wrong unless the system is used regularly or people notify the station. "There are about 50 places it can break down," says Cain. "I spent several days during April vacation working on about three miles of cables." Two Continental technicians spent about half a week in June on fairly short notice "tinkering with everything from Reading High to the Wakefield border."

On day one, we enter the classrooms and discover three cameras trained on teacher, students or display mechanism - in this case, a large pad of

"Art is a human activity," wrote Leo Tolstoy. Obviously he never read National Wildlife magazine. According to a recent article, elephants also have an artistic bent. One elephant at a Syracuse, New York zoo, for instance, has created more than 200 drawings and paintings since being given paper and pens in 1976. Experts say that the fact that the elephant's productions are reasonably centered on each page and that each one is "finished" indicates that the elephant does have some sense of art and good form.

A conversation with the voice of Snow White

From S-1

One hundred and forty-nine women and girls competed for the role, including the then popular Deanna Durbin. Caselotti got the job indirectly through her father, a singing teacher in Los Angeles. "One day one of the Walt Disney representatives called his studio and asked if he knew of a little girl who could sing and speak as a child would but still have had some operatic training. I happened to have picked up the telephone upstairs when my father was talking with them and I heard the whole thing and I said 'Papa! How about me?' I sang a few high notes and started to sing like a little kid." Her father ordered her off the phone, but the man from Disney liked her voice and had her in for an audition.

It took three years for the animated project to come to fruition. But, it wasn't until her work as Snow White was almost completed that Caselotti said she discovered that the actors who voiced the dwarfs earned $150 a day, while she pulled in $20, except for the last three days when she was given a raise to $50. She later earned more money doing sporadic promotional work.

Although Caselotti readily admits that this unpleasant aspect of a pleasant experience was unfair and frustrating, she amazingly does not appear to be harboring bitter or caustic feelings.

"To be truthful with you I don't think it was terrible because this man was a very great man and what he thought was the right thing to do might have been right. Who knows, really. What might be legal or illegal became important later. Like, he would not use my name on the screen. He felt it was spoiling an illusion. He had to change this when he did the next movie because they were getting after him with legal angles.

"...I have learned never to dislike Walt Disney, if anything I love this man. He's with me, he's not dead. I feel his presence is everywhere. This man will never die, he's a very great man. What I may object to, if you want me to tell you the truth, what I may object to is the people there at Disney today. They are not people of nostalgic feeling. This is the 50th anniversary and I think I should have been presented everywhere. 'Here she is after 50 years.' But, they too may be right. How can I tell?"

Although Caselotti did admit that deep down she feels they are wrong, especially when she was recently told she was too old to lift the veil on the Snow White star on the Walk of Fame in Hollywood. A young woman in a Snow White costume was placed in the limelight and allowed to present the star, just as a nameless young woman in costume recently completed a 19-city promotional tour. While pretty and sweet and quite gentle with children, the costumed Snow White could do little more than gurgles and her charming prince.

When "Snow White" was made, times were very tough at the Disney Studios, and residuals were not paid out on projects until after the early Fifties, which could easily explain the lack of money up front. But Caselotti said that in 1949, when she was going through some lean times and went to Disney looking for work, she was given neither the work nor a small percentage of the enormous wealth which she helped that cartoon to amass.

"I don't get any money when the film is shown and I never got any money for recordings that were made. They made a set of records that you can buy today, 50 years later, of Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs with the original voices. And they finally did put my name on that, but I never got a penny for that. But, there was no law that said you had to. Some people are great-hearted and some are not. Maybe Disney felt he had a hard time making money and wasn't going to part with any he didn't have to. I don't know, I never got a chance to talk with him about that."

"...Luckily I was smart enough to make my own money. I found that I was not going to make it through Walt Disney. I wasn't going to make it in any way singing or as an actress, and I decided I'd have to learn. Now, if they had given me an occasional job now and then I wouldn't have bothered. Instead, I decided to learn to make money in real estate. And I find I am extremely happy with what I did, because I'm very well situated. I'm not going to say that I'm terribly wealthy, but believe me, I won't ever need a dime again in my life. And I never could have done it if I had hoped for a few little things here and there as an actress or singer. This is 50 years later."

Divorced once and widowed twice to "three Prince Charmings," Caselotti now lives a quiet life that includes tending a colorful flower garden and is trying to live happily ever after. Her formula for peace of mind is surprisingly simple, and no doubt explains the lack of rancor she shows toward the folks at Disney. "This is why I don't get angry with them now, because I know this: 2000 years from now I'll be dead. Everybody will be dead, all the guys who say 'You can't do this, we don't want you because you're an old lady,' will be dead. There will be two things remaining. The memory of Walt Disney and the memory of Adriana Caselotti."

paper on an easel. Each room contains a large screen 41" diagonal television which receives the picture sent from any of the three remote cameras.

"I'm really nervous," says Howland. "I've never done anything like this before." Being on camera is not all that makes him nervous. Although he has a technical assistant today, in the future he, as the teacher, will be expected to lecture, write, ask and answer questions - and control all three cameras and any other audiovisual material through the switches at his fingertips. He sees his own students in front of him, Wakefield students on the large TV, and himself or whatever image he decides to project on a smaller TV perched atop the larger one. He must also be aware of what the microphones are projecting and whether he and the other students are close enough to them.

The students walk in and sit down, automatically and predictably pushing their desks too far away from the mikes in front of them. They move closer. The system is turned on and Wakefield hears a lot of "bacon and eggs frying" which sounds, when transmitted back to Reading, like "popcorn." The magic marker squeals every time it hits the paper; bells ring at different times to announce the end of different periods and it's difficult to tell whether they're ringing in the hallway or on the TV; the master mixer, the audio output, and the white-balancing cameras need adjusting. At the end of day one, the conclusion is that "the system is workable."

Once the link was made between Reading and Wakefield, the equipment in and the rooms set, it took only 45 minutes to get from visual and audio static to "workable" and five days to approach the goal described by Bennett of "making the technical medium transport."

The aim of the video classroom is to preserve programs in danger of being cancelled - not to combine classes or eliminate staff members. The recent pilot program in Reading and Wakefield provides enough data for the mechanisms - technical and administrative - to be in place when they are needed.

Retired Men's Club

The Retired Men's Club of Wakefield enjoyed an interesting and fascinating program on energy a their meeting on July 8. Wes Moore of Everett showed a movie on the construction of the hydro-electric power plant in James Bay, Quebec. This is a complex that covers an area the equivalent in size to England. He also arranged for the energy conservation van to be parked in the parking lot so that members could visit it. Attendance of members and guests was 200.

The members welcomed the following guests: Lynd G. Farrell of Woburn, James A. Greenwood of Arlington, Walter Larsson of Florida, John H. Moore of Wellesley, Jon Sasso of New Jersey and Ian McBride of Wakefield.

New members were Ed Garniewicz of Peabody and Warren Howlett of Wakefield.

Door prizes were won by Charley Hayter of Lynnfield and Frederick Moulton of Reading.

Twenty-two birthdays were celebrated. A moment of silence marked the passing of Fred Twombly (1908-1987).

The Safety Committee is having a riverboat cruise on August 11 and are opening it up to the entire membership. Tickets are available for $8. Pickups will be made of people at 1 p.m. at the First Parish Congregational Church in Wakefield and at Groveland. The band reported it will be playing at Tewksbury Hospital on July 23.

The Camera Club and Stamp Collecting Club are not meeting during the summer months. The Travel Club reported that all tickets have been sold for both the Red Sox ballgame on July 18 and the Boothbay Harbor trip on October 6-8.

Members exchange magazines among themselves and they collect eyeglasses to be given to needy persons in South America.

The next meeting of the club will be on July 22 when the speaker will be Joseph D. Kennedy Jr., a member and a 47-year photo journalist with Associated Press. He will discuss his life with Associated Press. This promises to be another very interesting program and it is hoped that all retired men in the vicinity of Wakefield will visit the club.

Meetings of the club are on the second and fourth Wednesdays of each month. Coffee and donuts are served at 9 a.m. and the business meeting starts promptly at 9:30.

Over 600 retirees from Wakefield and surrounding towns are members of this active organization. No invitation or sponsor is needed, just come to the First Parish Congregational Church and the hospitality committee will see that you meet people.

Children will also learn about animal behavior - how to approach a strange dog or cat, basic pet care and needs, the daily activity of one of the nation's largest animal care facilities, the MSPCA's Angell Memorial Animal Hospital in Boston, and much more!

The August 3 - August 7 session runs each day from 9 a.m. to 12:30 p.m.

Video classroom

students and technicians proven that the interactive video classroom can function, they've demonstrated that it functions well. Through flexibility and curiosity, they dealt with and learned from several variables: visual displays - a color painting in a book fills the screen entirely so that students at the remote site can see it more clearly than those in the same room with it; camera angle - the bigger the teacher's face the better; combination of message and medium - handing out printed material before class and showing the teacher as often as possible on the TV screen is superior to focusing on words on a chart.

As the week progressed, barriers came down and personalities emerged; students learned to speak up, rather than fade out, as they ended their sentences. They're all looking forward to meeting each other. Cosentino says, "The kids spoke of Ron Howland as a person. In only four days, they developed a real relationship."

The staff itself developed a clear sense of the value of small group instruction. In many cases, the microphones caused more interaction than there might have been in a class of 25 or more because each student felt obliged to contribute - just ask any of those kids how an "on-the-spot" interview feels. With all the voices coming at the teacher through the same speaker, the staff also developed a sense of perfect class size - four students, six at the most on each end.

Most important, everyone present in the electronic classroom really got into it. "Every classroom is a very sacred place for the free and open exchange of ideas," says Howland. "It takes a while to develop a relationship with any new group of students and I was amazed at how quickly the students and I - surrounded by video equipment - were able to respond intellectually and emotionally."

A tremendous amount of cooperation among four separate school systems and the successful "networking" among four competitive cable companies confirm very nicely that not only has the electronic classroom come of age - it works!

Barbecuing is safe done in moderation

Outdoor cooking has become a summer tradition for many Americans. The charcoal or gas grill is now a common fixture in most backyards. But recent stories about health risks associated with barbecuing have made many people wonder just how safe this popular form of food preparation is.

According to the American Institute for Cancer Research, there is very little health risk in our traditional outdoor barbecue, as long as it is done in moderation. While the Institute does note that there have been increased cancer risks associated with consumption of grilled foods, this increase occurs mainly in countries where cooking over charcoal or open fires is the principal means of preparing food and where daily consumption of such foods is considered normal.

For most Americans, the summer barbecue should be a time of enjoyment. To help make it so, and to do it in a way which minimizes cancer risk, the Institute has prepared a booklet called, "Facts You Should Know About Outdoor Cooking." To receive a free copy send a stamped, self-addressed, business sized envelope to American Institute for Cancer Risk, Dept. OC2, Washington, D.C. 20069.

As General Manager of Appleton Inn, Woburn, Fair will be responsible for the on-site operations of this 122 room property, which serves as the flagship of all new Appleton Inn properties. Since Woburn's opening in June, 1986, Appleton Inns have opened in Tinton Falls, New Jersey and Lowell, with Danvers scheduled for opening in late August and Princeton, New Jersey to begin construction in November.

THOMAS FAIR (front) was recently tended a poolside reception upon being named General Manager of the Appleton Inn in Woburn. Marci Ragucci (left) was in charge of the affair as numerous dignitaries from the surrounding area had the opportunity to meet Mr. Fair and welcome him to this area. The pool was decorated with lovely floating floral bouquets from Hillside Florists. Head chef Jamie McKeown did several large ice sculptures including two dolphins and also prepared a gourmet's list of hot and cold hors d'oeuvres that were enthusiastically greeted. It was a delightful affair, tastefully done and Mr. Fair seemed to enjoy the evening thoroughly.

Class reunions are a lot of fun, if one goes there with the right attitude. Kathy, however, spoils everything by saying, "I'm going to see who is falling apart." I don't go to reunions for a different reason. The one that I went to last year was very

I had a great day yesterday at the Winchester Country Club golf course. I got a "Birdie" on the second hole, an "Eagle" on the fourth, and I hit a low-flying seagull when I teed off at the 8th hole. Kathy said to me when I got home from work, "Here, Fatso, this letter is for you. I thought it was for me and I steamed it open by mistake." The Leaning Tower of Pisa has been purchased by the Hilton Hotel Chain and will probably be renamed "The Tilting Hilton." I gave up teaching Sunday School because of the class of boys that I had, some of whom will write a nutty column like "Woodchips" some day. Here are some of their answers. Mike Gaffney: "A wedding is a funeral where you get to smell your own flowers." George Duffy: "Sunday is the strongest day, all the others are 'week days.'" Jimmy Rataj: "Halo is the opposite of Good-bye." Johnny Harrington: "Paradise is when your mother-in-law lives 3000 miles away." Paul Nott: "To save our souls we must walk on our heels." Happy Birthday, Gayle Harrington.

"Except as disturbed by wars," Conklin wrote, "Reading pursued a quiet existence until the Federalists and Republicans began their arguments over the advisability of declaring war against England in 1811. The Republicans took advantage of the political difference in Reading and brought about the setting up of South Reading as a separate town, February 25, 1812."

William Lloyd Garrison, in fact, Conklin points out, said that "for some time Reading continued to be the banner town in the anti-slavery conflict." And when the war between the states came, Conklin continues, the town entered the fray "heart and soul. Companies were formed; 34 more than her quota enlisted, 411 in all. Fifteen were killed in battle and 33 died of disease."

For centuries, gourds have been made into everything from ladles and jugs to rattles and thumb pianos. The ancient Peruvians used the gourd's shell as a substitute for sections of the human skull in primitive head operations. And according to International Wildlife magazine, gourds even backed Haiti's currency during a coin scarcity in the early 19th century. Haiti has since gone off the gourd standard, but its monetary unit is still called the gourde.

Medieval Japan and Europe is the theme of this year's Medieval Festival at Hammond Castle Museum in Gloucester on Saturday, July 25 and Sunday, July 26 from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Beautiful Hammond Castle will be the setting to see real armor demonstrations by Higgins Armory Museum, Japanese fencing by the Boston Kendo Club, the popular and legendary Merlin the Magician and sword demonstration by the Castle's Education Department.

Children's activities will include Japanese puppeteer Aili Singer, storyteller Daisy Nell, Japanese paper dyer Kobo Kamiya, face painting, dragon hunts, Medieval hair braiding, games and a jousting contest.

The Festival is sure to make an enjoyable outing for the whole family. No reservations are necessary — just come and enjoy. Admission is $5.00 for adults and $3.00 for children (6-12 years old).

For information, call the Museum at 283-7673.

D-DAY EXHIBIT

"D-Day: We Were There", an exhibit of more than 50 paintings and drawings by three

United States Navy artists who participated in the Allied invasion of Normandy in 1944, will be at the Visitor Information Building near "Old Ironsides" in the Charlestown Navy Yard, July 31 to October 18.

This exhibit is free to the public and open daily from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. The exhibit is co-sponsored by the United States Navy and Boston National Historical Park.

ROCKPORT LODGE

The Rockport Lodge is located in an ideal setting. A 15-minute walk will take you to quaint shops in the town's center, or to really secluded North Shore conservation areas and beaches. Nearby paths provide the luxury of quiet walks. The ocean air is absolutely refreshing. It is a cozy, casual, welcoming place.

A former apple orchard provides spacious grounds and the setting for the two residential buildings. The Main House is a rather grand farmhouse originally built in the 1750s. The Annex, completed in the 1920s, includes a very large screened-in porch located near a serene, wooded section of the grounds. The spectacularly functional Barn, located just across the street, is also of 1700 vintage. It serves as an indoor, all purpose facility.

Established in 1906 as a summer lodge where low and moderate income women could enjoy themselves, The Rockport Lodge is one of the few non-profit organizations of its kind still in existence today.

A special herb gardening weekend is open to the public on August 7 and 8. If you plan to take the workshops only, the fee is $30. If you plan to stay at The Lodge, the fee is $15 for participation in the workshops in addition to your lodging fee. Daily rates for accommodation range from a moderate $35 — $42 per night. Three healthy, delicious meals are included.

For more information contact The Rockport Lodge at 61 South Street, Rockport, Ma. 01966, phone (617) 546-2090.

From Rockport to Charlestown, from Gloucester to Woburn COMING ATTRACTIONS searches far and wide for that special event of interest to all. If you have knowledge of a happening or other noteworthy event, write, care of this local newspaper and tell us all about it. We will hit the road in pursuit of a good time.

'Teen Girls' Day'

Why not bring a friend or maybe a few, to a special "Teen Girls' Day" at the Choate Hospital in Woburn on Friday, July 24, from 9 a.m. to 3:30 p.m.

Experimenting with make-up, trying new aerobic dance steps and going out to lunch are all fun things to do with friends! But as we all know, friends aren't just for fun. A friend is someone we can be serious with too. Someone we'd like to learn new things with — such as ways to become healthier, feel better and look your best!

At Teen Girls' Day, we will start off with a juice and muffin "Wake Up", which will be followed by a facial cleaning, make-up session. We will discuss the correct procedure for cleansing the face and offer advice in choosing the best make-up and colors for each skin type. Everyone will have the opportunity to experiment with various products and to "make-up". This will further enhance facial color and self-image. We will discuss your best colors using various color samples.

After learning to look your best, it's time to feel your best. We'll learn that healthy eating doesn't have to be boring. Our health educator will discuss and demonstrate how to prepare healthy snacks as well as which diets are actually dangerous to you and your friend's health.

Lunch with friends will consist of "Make Your Own Pizza" — all kinds of toppings will be ready for you to personalize your pizza. A salad bar will be available. Dessert will consist of a fruit bar with delicious toppings.

After lunch we will relax and listen to a speaker discuss "Decision-Making and Effective Communication for Teens". This topic has been very effective in dealing with peer-pressure.

Lastly, how about a session of Aerobic Dance — (no previous experience is necessary)! Just bring your gym shorts or wear sweats and sneakers. Be prepared for a fun workout!

Please bring with you to Teen Girls' Day a stand-up mirror, a head-band or barrette, sneakers, comfortable clothes for aerobics and most importantly, a friend!

For more information and registration forms, please call 933-6700, ext. 4377. Pre-registration is required. Space is limited. This program is best suited for junior and senior high age girls.
